Not illustrated. 1880 Excerpt: . . . the light of a confidential communication), that my inclinations will dispose and decide me to remain as I am, unless a clear and insurmountable conviction should be impressed on my mind, that some very disagreeable consequences must in all human probability result from the indulgence of my wishes. It would be difficult to conceive a nobler personal character, than this confidential letter of Washington to an intimate friend discloses. His utter abandonment of selfish considerations, as affecting him personally or relatively; and his calm fearless resolve and readiness to surrender to the call of recognized duty, without regard to cost or consequence, present a picture of manhood to a carping world, which the annals of human nature cannot surpass, perhaps cannot equal. Well would it be for the young Americanism of the present day, to pause and ponder, rather than criticize the speaking canvas! After the popular election for President of the United States had taken place, but before the result was definitely known, the election of Washington was so apparent, that many applications were, even at that time, made to him, for preferment and office. To one of these applicants he, thus strikingly, wrote: --Should it become absolutely necessary for me to occupy the station in which your letter pre-supposes me, I have determined to go into it perfectly free from all engagements of every nature whatsoever. A conduct in conformity to this resolution, would enable me, in balancing the various pretensions of different...
