And this new science reaches into areas once reserved for religion and philosophy. While the conclusions are unbelievably fantastic by today s standards (we could travel to any point in the universe, or in time, instantly - we could achieve physics holy grail of cosmic unification, and unify the large scale universe with small scale quantum mechanics - we could see eternal health for everyone who ever lived - and proper understanding of unification would not only show that a being called God must exist but humans would be unified with that God), I don t think the steps taken to arrive at those conclusions are irrational at all. They have their foundation in quantum mechanics, Einstein s Relativity, a recent demonstration in electrical engineering at Yale University and, of course, the inspirational work of Professor Stephen Hawking. Yes, I m writing about science AND religion - my book has its beginnings in a cellular automaton (in mathematics and computer science, a collection of cells on a grid that evolves through a number of discrete time steps according to a set of rules based on the states of neighbouring cells) and grew into a belief that the universe has an electronic foundation. I ve always been far more curious about the distant future than the present, and this is what my curiosity has revealed to me. Its conclusions are absolutely incredible at times . which is why I felt the need to spend years (decades, actually) writing a long, detailed article explaining those conclusions, and making...
