The average value of improvements in the United States is low in comparison with their importance to the industry. They are too often cheaply constructed, owing in some cases to the fact that they are built on land held under uncertain leases, in others to the imminent probability of the substitution of agriculture for flock husbandry, and in general to the lack of stability and permanence of the industry and the consequent scarcity of capital and high rates of interest. The unsubstantial nature of the improvements entails a heavy burden on the industry and explains the high charges for maintenance and repairs and for depreciation, which together amount to nearly 5 cents a head. Until the industry can be put on a more permanent footing it will apparently be impossible to reduce this item. The investment for equipment is an important item in the...
